

Mission Statement

Old-House Journal is the original restoration magazine about restoring, renovating, decorating, and maintaining homes 50 or more years old. It is also a source of ideas for consumers intent on building historically inspired new houses. OHJ serves readers who are serious about their homes, enthusiastic about restoring, willing and able to spend money on products and services, and sensitive to period character and style.

Launched in 1973, the 35-year-old publication provides practical, step-by-step articles on the how-to of restoration, renovation, and preservation for both serious homeowners and professionals.

Editorial content includes technical and how-to articles, reviews of architectural and decorating styles, old-house renovation and restoration case histories, product reviews and evaluations, questions and answers, hints, tips, and old-house advice.

Gordon Bock, Editor-In-Chief

